Are love and money necessarily opposed? Is arranged marriage primitive? Many would argue yes. It is widely accepted that in modern societies romantic love, the couple and the nuclear family are the ‘correct’ ways to organize intimate life. But, like many other normative ideas, these too were the product of particular historical developments in post-enlightenment Europe. A look at societies in other parts of the world demonstrates all too often that modernity in the realm of love, intimacy and family had a different trajectory from the European one. To characterize marriage, love, and familial relationships as backward or retrograde on grounds of their difference with (normative) models prevalent in the west results in a fundamental misunderstanding of the variety of different ways that societies have forged intimate relations. This course surveys ideas and practices surrounding love, marriage, and capital in the modern world with a particular focus on comparison between Africa and India. The first half of the class concentrates on key theoretical texts that lay the foundation for the study of gender, intimacy and modern life. The latter part of the class examines case studies from Africa and India. Using a range of readings the course will explore such questions as the emergence of companionate marriage in Europe; arranged marriage, dowry, love and money.

Course Requirements: Your grade is divided between course participation (20 percent), and two papers each worth 80 percent. For presentations, we request that students get together and work in groups to come up with questions that are suitable for discussion. Presentations should NOT summarize the work which we will have of course already read. Rather they should provide selected quotes and questions to spark discussion. In terms of writing, we require all people taking the course for a grade to write two 5-7 page papers. The first paper is due the Friday of week 5. The second paper is due the Friday of week 10. Topics are to be decided in consultation with the instructors. All papers should be double spaced, 12 point font, with page numbers.
